

Concessionary fares and free travel

In Scotland, you are eligible for a free bus pass if you are aged 60 or over. You may also be eligible if you are under 60 and have a disability.

The pass is called a National Entitlement Card. You can apply to your local council to get your card. Find your local council on mygov.scot.

You will be eligible on the grounds of disability if you:

- get the higher rate of the mobility component of Disability Living Allowance
- get the higher/middle rate of the care component of Disability Living Allowance
- receive Attendance Allowance
- receive any rate of the mobility or daily living component of Personal Independence Payment
- have a blue badge
- are profoundly or severely deaf
- have been told not to drive on medical grounds
- suffer from a recognised mental illness, learning disability or personality disorder that has lasted for more than a year. You must need to travel to health or social care appointments as part of treatment activities, care or for rehabilitation. Your ability to travel must also be impaired
- are terminally ill
- have a progressive degenerative condition and you have mobility problems
- have suffered a loss of limbs
- are registered blind or partially sighted - there's information about registration on the Royal National Institute of Blind People website
- are an injured veteran with mobility problems.

You can also apply for a free bus pass for a companion to travel with you if your disability means you cannot travel alone.

For further information about the National Entitlement Card, and other travel concessions, please use the following link: Concessionary fares and free travel